Visual Communications Students gear up for Lost & Found Art Exhibition, April 3-12, 2009 at Medicine Hat College.

Twenty-three Visual Communications students at Medicine Hat College are losing their minds.

Every year graduating students from the Visual Communications program produce an end-of-the-year exhibition, to showcase the work and the skills they have gained over the previous three years.

For this year's final exhibition, Lost & Found, the students have chosen to have a "green" theme. Recycled material, such as cardboard and corrugated board, will be used for the decor of the exhibition.

"We are using recycled cardboard and will reuse it afterwards," says student Tobie Laliberte, "I just love working with the natural look and flexibility of cardboard."

This year's show will feature a wide variety of mediums including painting, graphic design, furniture design, illustration, video and photography.

Each student is responsible for the art work they enter in the show, along with the preparation involved in hosting an exhibition.

"Every student produces their own original work for the show," explains Laliberte, "along with helping plan, promote and prepare for the event itself. The class is split into various committees with the work divided amongst them."

The Lost and Found Exhibition will take place April 3 - 12 in the front corridor at Medicine Hat College, attendance is free.
